Introduction

Administrative History

The Project Arts Centre was initially created as a temporary and singular artistic event. This was in the form of a three-week festival at the Gate Theatre, Parnell Square, Dublin, on Tuesday November 29, 1966. The event included plays, readings, concerts of jazz and classical music, teach-ins on censorship and theatre and experiments in children’s theatre and art exhibitions. The programme was produced under the name ‘Project 67’, was a triple bill and received by attendees and critics as an immediate success. The first of the works was The Tiger by Murray Schisgal, followed by Harold Pinter’s The Lover and was completed by James Saunders’ Double Double.

The founding members of Project and who were involved in the productions on this opening night were Gillian Hanna, Colm O’Briain, Robert Carlisle, Dinah Stabb and Ian Milton. Although the initial impetus was to produce a single play, this soon evolved into a season of experimental music, visual arts, seminars, children's theatre and a debate on censorship with guest, Edna O'Brien. Project's first exhibition showed the work of four artists John Behan, Charlie Cullen, Michael Kane and John Kelly.

In February, 1967, Tuck & Co. Offered two rooms above their premises in Lower Abbey Street to Project ‘67. These rooms were converted and made suitable for exhibition purposes by those artists who had shown at the Gate. They agreed to work for a co-operative, non-profit distributing gallery. The theatrical interests of the Project were phased out for two years and the Project gallery concentrated on showcasing artistic works. The gallery pursued a policy of mixing one-man exhibitions with group shows. Exhibitions by gallery members were sent to the provinces as well as the United States and Switzerland, showing an early and much recognised emphasis on European as well as Irish artistic influence.

In April 1969, Project was forced to vacate these rooms when Tuck & Co. sold their premises. The new owners, however, recommended Project to the YMCA, for a lease of their basement under the Metropolitan Hall. A lease for one year was issued on 9 June 1969 and the Project members spent the summer converting the premises into a performance and gallery space. Though major funding assistance from the Arts Council of Ireland was not forthcoming at this time, and in spite of serious financial uncertainty, the Project Arts Centre was opened on 3 September 1969 by the then Minister for Finance, Charles J. Haughey, T.D.

Project was well received as it fulfilled an important role within the theatrical and artistic scene within Dublin in the 1960s. Project was to provide an alternative venue for actors, directors, playwrights, artists, poets and sculptors and provided an outlet for emerging and innovative artists. Socially, Dublin and Ireland was to experience change and refraction that was in parallel with much of Europe. The coming years would see Ireland’s entry into the European Union, (EU) then known as the European Economic Community (EEC) in 1973, followed by much industrial expansion, health care reform and education reform. Ireland had long earned a reputation as an island with an immensely rich and proud artistic heritage with Project being a radical and energetic reaction away from the artistic norm and brought a new and dynamic focus on performance and visual arts.
Existing established theatres such as the Abbey Theatre and the Gate Theatre had been to the forefront of theatrical production. The Abbey had its own in-house production company and adhered strictly to its own mandate of Irish written and Irish language plays. The Gate had a broader European ethos while still embracing Irish original theatre. Project was to be a new departure for Irish theatre and for Irish creative art in general and was a very real catalyst for change in Irish society from the 1960s onwards.

In 1970, Project found itself housed in a disused factory on South King Street, before moving permanently in 1974 to the former Dollard Printing works at East Essex Street, Dublin 2. Charles Merril, an American business man, was at this time setting up a magazine, The Arts in Ireland and suggested to Project that they share a premises in South King Street.

Artistic development at this time was organised by Martin Reynolds and Charles Harper, while Chris O’Neill, Tom Hickey and Tom Jordan were in charge of drama. Theatrical works scouted by Colm O’Briain, resulted in the beginning of a long relationship between the Project and the Sheridan Brothers, Jim and Peter. Their amateur drama group the SLOT players, which also included Neil Jordan, held a summer of productions at the Project in 1970. Alan Stanford was subsequently invited to be on the theatre committee along with Ann O’Driscoll and Sean O’Briain. The following period proved to be one of turbulence and of staff and artistic disputes. Stanford managed drama production and instigated a policy that saw the theatre active and engaged throughout the day, from breakfast plays, lunchtime plays, evening and late night plays.

The pursuance of a permanent home was a constant issue to the continuity of the Project and its directors. Project stayed at South King Street for two years but the impending end of lease was on the horizon. A large warehouse was cited at the rear of the Olympia Theatre on East Essex Street in Temple Bar.

Michael Bulfin was elected chairman of the Project in 1973 after Colm O’Briain resigned from the position. O’Briain spent five years developing Project into an established and successful alternative arts venue. Bulfin was a sculptor by trade and was responsible for visual arts while Lee Gallagher was in charge of drama.

Bulfin, Stanford and Gallagher managed the move of the Project to Temple Bar in 1974. Bulfin was outraged by the lack of input and cooperation in relation to assistance in the move and renovation from listed Project members. He sought to reassess the membership protocol and rights of members. Though this case was fought bitterly in the end between Bulfin and the aggrieved members, even reaching the High Court at one stage, Bulfin’s resignation came in 1976.

Project’s arrival in Temple Bar saw it develop as a well established artists’ co-operative. It had a film committee, a poets’ committee, theatre and artists’ committee. The 1974 Arts Act saw the Project’s funding and income rise from £3,000 to £34,000 per year by 1976. The extra funding and capital allowed for the development of an in-house theatre company, under Stanford’s direction, and saw theatre at the Project flourish, with a huge European influence.

The Sheridan brothers joined the Project in late 1975. They were repulsed by the perceived low standard of theatre in Ireland at the time. The Sheridans infused a policy of producing socially and politically engaging work, including their own plays, No Entry, Mobile Homes and The Liberty Suit. Further controversy arose in the form of a performance from London based performance group Gay Sweatshop. Such was the fervent reaction and overtly conservative outcry and horror at the performance’s homosexual content that Dublin Corporation removed its grant allowance from the Project.

The development of the Project theatre under the Sheridans and after their tenure into the 1980s saw the emergence of a new wave of Irish production involving the likes of Frank McGuinness, Tom Murphy, Tom Hickey, Tom McIntyre and groups such as Rough Magic, founded in 1984. The 1980s would also see an increase in musical events at the Project, with a stage provided for emerging and well known Irish groups and musicians such as U2, the Boomtown Rats, Christy Moore, The Blades and many others. On 19 April 1982, disaster struck in the form of a fire at the Project premises. Over half the building was destroyed, along with an abundance of files and records. The theatre and about half of the gallery space remained.

In 1986 Tim O’Neill was appointed director of the Project having previously worked with TEAM educational theatre company. Under O’Neill the Project maintained its productivity and dedication to Irish artists and quality productions, and continued participation in the Dublin Theatre Festival. New and established Irish and international playwrights justified the continued assistance and funding from the Arts Council of Ireland.

1990 brought about further change and development for the Project. Discussions for the establishment of a Project Press were opened to further expand the ability of the Project to promote the arts in Ireland. Marie Foley was one of the first artists to have a publication commissioned for the Project Press. Deliberations were also ongoing surrounding the redevelopment of the Project Arts Centre. A venue redevelopment sub-commission was established with consultancy from Colm O’Briain and Arthur Duignan. Submissions were made to the Arts Council of Ireland regarding this work. It coincided with the widespread redevelopment of the Temple Bar area which was instigated by a government renewal scheme aimed at making Temple Bar a cultural quarter for Dublin, with the Project as one of its focal groups.

In 1993 Fiach Mac Conghail became the new artistic director of the Project and substantially revived the centre’s reputation for groundbreaking work, including a new focus on off-site productions, perhaps most notably the ambitious production Chiasm by Dorothy Cross at a school in Galway. Mac Conghail proved fearless and courageous in his pushing and indeed at times tearing of the boundaries for artistic production in Ireland. Project introduced an emphasis on the artistic ‘space’ as an integral part of the visual and performing arts. Many of the works produced could only be successful in their site specific location. Car parks, factories and schools all became gallery spaces and stages for which the Project and the artists it worked with could produce their works. This was largely due to the fact that the Project premises at East Essex Street came under redevelopment in 1995-6. An alternative venue was found at an old snooker hall at Henry Place, Dublin 2, known as the Mint. Project @ the Mint would be a new departure in the history of Project. Mac Conghail oversaw an extremely successful experimental and engaging off-site series of works, commencing in 1996 and lasting until 1999.

_Somewhere Near Vada_ launched the new Project Arts Centre on 12 Jun 2000. This large scale multidisciplinary arts event was curated by Jaki Irvine and featured prominent Irish and international artists such as James Coleman and Zoe Walker. Kathy McArdle was appointed as new artistic director, after the departure of Fiach Mac Conghail, and entrusted with guiding the new Project into the new millennium. Keen to stamp a personal and direct input into the artistic programming and development of the Project, McArdle managed an artistic program that was successful but was criticised for favouring theatre and performance to the detriment of visual arts. The post of Visual Arts director, held by Valerie O’Connor was dismissed adding some weight to this view.

January 2001 saw the appointment of new Project Arts Centre General Manager, Jennifer Traynor, new Press Officer, Siobhan Colgan, new Chairperson, Bridget Webster and new Artistic Programme Coordinator Niamh O’Donnell. Early in 2002 Willie White became the new Artistic Director of the Project Arts Centre following the resignation of Kathy McArdle.

This collection of Project Arts Centre papers terminates in February-March 2003.

The Papers

The Project Arts Centre collection was acquired by the National Library in 2006. The papers relate to the activities of Project between 1967 and 2003. The collection is contained in 160 boxes and it is in good condition throughout. Some items concerning personal and financial information (and which are marked NFC) are not available for consultation by readers. This will be reviewed in 30 years.

Arrangement

The collection is arranged under eight series of headings. Visual Arts, Theatre, Board of Directors, Finance, Administration, Project Building, Project Press, and Miscellaneous. These series are listed chronologically within each year from 1967 to 2003. The visual arts and theatre productions are listed in order of original production at the Project with the date of each production listed in brackets immediately following the event title. The covering dates of the corresponding papers are listed below this. A description of the contents of each file then follows.

Note on Ephemera

A comprehensive collection of posters from visual arts, theatre and performance and external events have been transferred to the Ephemera Department of the National Library of Ireland. These may be accessed under Ephemera Acc No. 856. Architectural drawings may be accessed at AD 3598.
